The robot watched a film about sharks on TV on Tuesday morning. He was frightened of the sharks. He cried and didn't work all day. When the robot cleaned the living room on Wednesday, he didn't clean it well! On Thursday, the robot painted the kitchen. I didn't like it because the robot painted it pink. Max helped me to paint it yellow again. On Friday, the robot washed the car and he washed Pex, too! On Saturday, the robot moved all the towels to the bedroom, and then he moved all the blankets to the bathroom.

Egypt has a lot of deserts – places where there is not much water. Camels are better than horses in deserts. They can go a long way before they need to drink. They are strong and they can carry more than horses. For hundreds of years, people travelled with camels between the Middle East and China. The camels carried tea, silk, food and other things. People sometimes call camels 'ships of the desert'.

The best thing at the circus was a clown called Charlie. Everyone laughed at him a lot. Everything he did was really funny. He had a white face, a big red nose and a tall, black hat. His clothes were all too big for him.

First, Charlie played with three balls. He tried to throw and catch them, but he always dropped one. Then he lost a ball, and he looked for it in funny places. He came and asked Jill, 'Have you got it?' She laughed and laughed, and said, 'No!' But then he took off his hat, and the ball was on his head! We were really surprised. After that, Charlie rode a small bike with only one wheel. He rode round in a big circle.
